A reception will be held on Feb. 7, from 5-7pm. The exhibition is an exploration of large format film photography and letterpress printmaking by Carter G. Woodson's 7th grade boys, who worked with Sawtooth photography teacher Joseph Brunjes to create large format photography "selfies". They learned to operate a large format camera with bellows and manual settings. Next they learned how to develop their film in the darkroom. Students also worked with Sawtooth interns Mackenzie Filson and April Honbarger, using letterpress and experimental collage. They learned about duality, how a single idea can be represented in two different ways. The boys created portraits about themselves using words printed on the letterpress and images cut from magazines. Davis Gallery, Through Feb. 14 - "Myself Seeing / Seeing Myself". Carter G. Woodson's 7th grade girls worked with visiting artist Diana Greene for four weeks. A reception will be held on Feb. 7, from 5-7pm. The girls also wrote about themselves, creating a portrait in words. They considered what the viewer might not know about them from looking at their photo.
